Student Spotlight This week's student spotlight is Petar from Washington. Students watched the following short film and created a new ending to the story. Here is the link to review the movie. https://youtube.com/watch?time_continue=5&v=y8KrXWe4qs. "The girl is sad about how her invention fails all the time. Unexpectedly, a mysterious bag comes out of the sky. The girl opens it and finds a note that says some encouraging words. "Don't give up on anything, because you just might learn from failure." Now, the girl is intimidated and starts to work. After days of hard work, she gets frustrated thinking her plans will never work. But then the note appears in her head. "You might just learn from failure." She realized, maybe the thinking wasn't the only key, because if you have confidence everything is easier. She gets pumped up and doesn't care for her plan. Instead, she uses a little thinking and a lot of confidence to realize the paper that fell from the sky was a plan, not the actual plan. So she attaches the paper to the airplane and makes it fly. The girl realizes confidence matters too. She decides to keep the note forever.

Mrs. C's Weekly Blog: So many students wrote wonderful endings to the short film this week. I enjoyed reading them all. Next week, we will create our Cardboard Box Project. Students will get information on how to create their project when I meet with them at their school.

I'm anxious to see what they create.
